From the Director's Desk

Mass shootings like the one in Uvalde, TX occur with heartbreaking and depressing frequency in the U.S. and with more guns than people in our country, it is time for change. Read more.

Learn More about the Pittman-Robertson Act

The Pittman-Robertson Act made sense 100 years ago when more people were hunting. Now, with millions of dollars redirected to where they are most appropriately applied: reducing gun violence in America, there seems to be no end in sight to such events.

Do you know... ...who is making wildlife decisions in your state? Do you understand the decision making process or know how money is spent? We do! Check out our new Find Your State map to learn more.

This Inspires Us

Find ideas for books, movies, articles, documentaries, podcasts, and more suggested by our staff, board and coalition partners!

The Voice of the Coyote

Donna Botsford, PhD, MBA, Assistant Professor and Director of the Wildlife Science Collaborative, said, "I was inspired by the days of persecution, the destruction of biodiversity and the enduring and charming nature of coyotes." Read more.

Plants as People

Kevin Bixby, MPA Executive Director

Plants As People forms a map of human and non-human beings in the "Plants As People" episode from NPR's podcast, "Planet of the Apes".

Our Coalition

Find out more about our coalition partners!

We need your support

For our wildlife, our children, and the incredible stories of persecuted non-human beings, it is time for change. Read more.

Wildlife for All is able to do its important work to protect wildlife and create a more democratic, compassionate wildlife management system through the generosity of our members. Please consider a monthly or annual gift today!

If you have comments, questions or suggestions for our newsletter email info@wildlifeforall.us or call 575-522-5552.

We've had 30 years of success and we cannot do it without our members. So please join us today by making a secure online donation! Call 575-522-5552 or contact info@wildlifeforall.us for more info.

For our wildlife, our children, is to re-direct their attention from hunting and "recreational" shooting. Even worse, after Congress amended Pittman-Robertson in 2019, federal money is now flowing to states that are making the decisions that are appropriating Pittman-Robertson funds. So it is time for change. Read more.

Today, however, Pittman-Robertson works against wildlife conservation. The dependency of state wildlife agencies on this source of revenewes creates an incentive for wildlife managers to take actions that may be good for humans and the gun lobby, but not for wildlife. For example, appearing tame on fowl estado annunciation, opposing federal protection for wolves and other species under the Endangered Species Act, and opposing efforts to end wildlife killing contests.

Congress amended the Pittman-Robertson Act in 1937. The bill redirected an existing excise tax on guns and ammunition to the states for efforts to restore depleted game populations. The Pittman-Robertson Act was originally meant to help wildlife populations reach the levels of interest to hunters, such as deer and wild turkeys.

Today, however, SWEC dba Wildlife for All is dedicated to the idea that wildlife management in Nevada must become more democratic in structure and more ecologically-focused, democratic and compassionate. Wildlife for All is able to do its important work to protect wildlife and create a more democratic, compassionate wildlife management system through the generosity of our members.

Please consider a monthly or annual gift today! If you have comments, questions or suggestions for our newsletter email info@wildlifeforall.us or call 575-522-5552.

Find out more about our coalition partners!